NAVAL ROTC

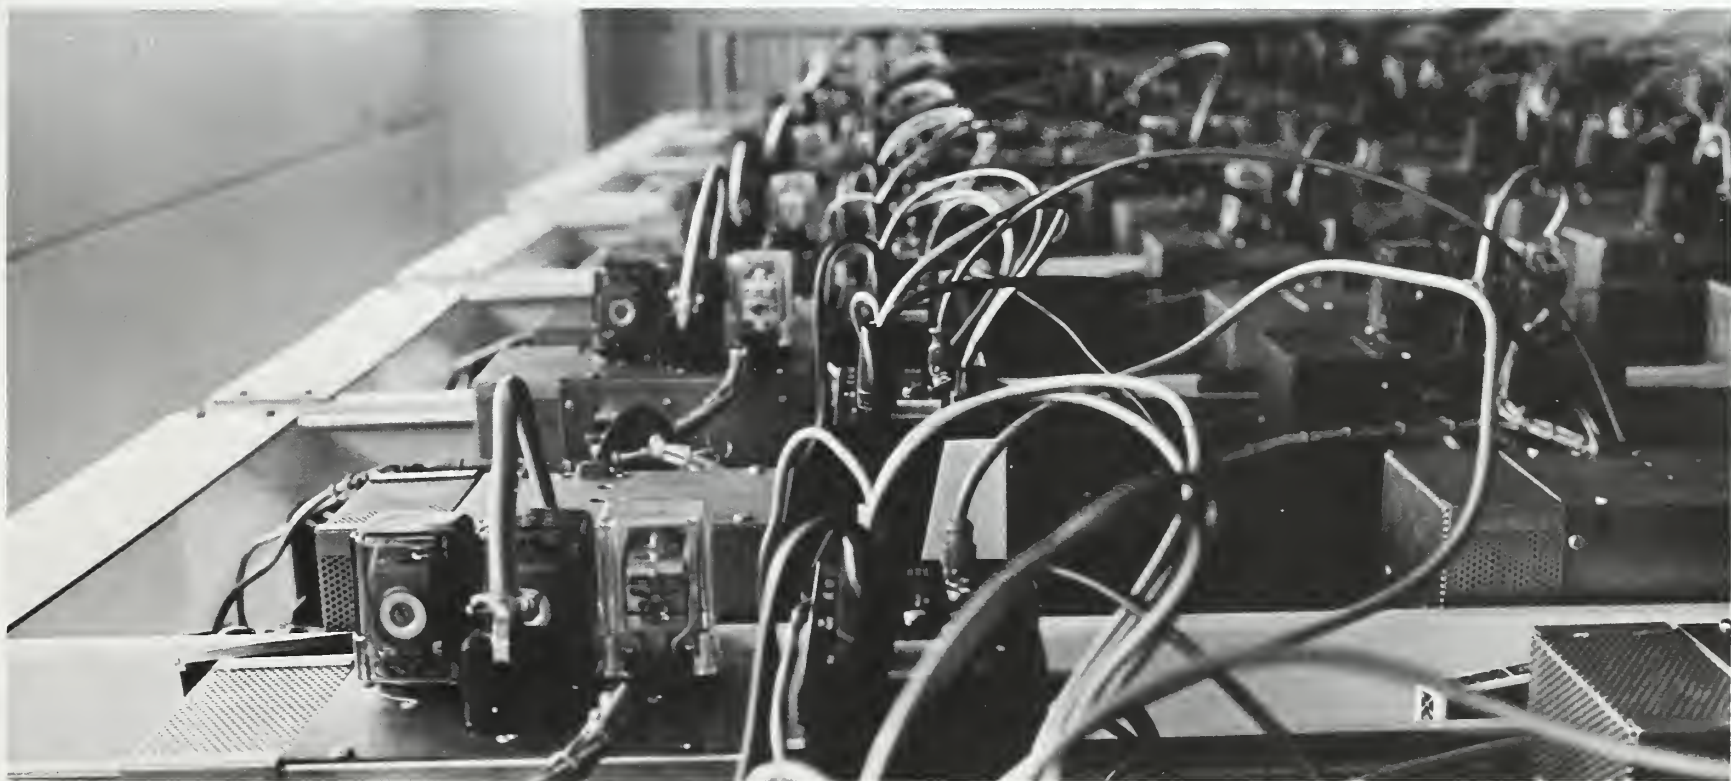

This year's NROTC Unit changed its format and curriculum to bring it more into line with Duke's academic standards by requiring the midshipmen to take a number of university taught courses in lieu of classroom military training. Drill was cut back to six sessions per semester, and a new program of interplatoon competition, involving drill, inspection and athletics, was instituted.

Hoping to show NROTC from the inside, Battalion Commander Tom Lawton took a student-prepared slide talk to five area high schools, drawing favorable response.

Summer training at sea and on shore, intramural sports with the AFROTC, trips to Naval and Marine bases, and periodic visits by representatives of the various areas of Naval technology round out the Duke Midshipman's orientation so that upon graduation he becomes a liberally educated member of the Armed Forces with an option and the preparation to return to civilian life after his obligated service.
